TOPICS AND GOALS OF THE CONFERENCE

Forming the level of technical risk, especially identifying hazards associated with degradation and fatigue processes occurring during operations, should be carried out at the design stage. The factor that significantly determines this procedure is the ability to diagnose and forecast the evolution of these processes, primarily by developing methods for detecting periods of initiation and early, low-energy phases of damage development of this type.

The conference aims to present the latest achievements in the modelling and simulation of mechanical system failures, diagnostics of fatigue and low-energy failures, the safety of technical systems, and diagnostics of the technical condition and development of structural failures. An essential part of the conference topics also includes issues in the field of broadly understood exploitation, with particular emphasis on selecting an effective strategy and methods for diagnosing and forecasting the condition and evolution of damage, as well as issues related to security and defence, understood both in military and forensic science.
